Anime: the New Face of Catholicism?

The Vatican has released a new anime “official mascot” named Luce.

Her name means “light,” and she’s the talisman for 2025 Jubilee, a holy year of pilgrimage announced by Pope Francis last May. Its motto is “Pilgrims of Hope,” which explains why Luce is wearing a raincoat and muddy boots.

She’s leading a group of similarly clad friends on a pilgrimage. First stop — the Lucca Comics and Games convention in Italy this week, “where the Vatican’s Dicastery for Evangelization will host a space dedicated to ‘Luce and Friends.’” The Catholic News Agency says this marks “the first time that a Vatican dicastery participates in a comics convention.” The manga-styled cartoon characters will also highlight the Holy See’s pavilion in Osaka, Japan, at Expo 2025 next year.

Archbishop Rino Fisichella, the Vatican’s jubilee organizer, unveiled the blue-haired, soulless-eyed cutie at a press conference on Monday. He described Luce as part of the Vatican’s youth outreach, attempting to engage in “the pop culture so beloved by our young people.”

Luce and Friends

Her friends are a purple-haired Chinese girl named Xin, and two boys, one Hispanic name Fe and one African named Sky. All of their names are gender-neutral, a fact not lost on Megan Peters of ComicBook.com, who writes, “From her big eyes to his rosary, Luce is definitely adorable...” (Emphasis added.) But for clarity and sanity’s sakes, we’ll continue assuming there are two boys and two girls.

The boys are wearing pants; the girls’ legs are bare, and Xin has a bandage on one knee. The escaloped shells in their eyes mimic a templar icon familiar to pilgrims at the Shrine of Saint James in Spain: Santiago de Compostela.

Each carries a stang, or forked staff, commonly associated with the horned god of witchcraft. The characters are wearing a rainbow assortment of jackets, and rainbow-colored rosaries hang around their necks. The colors are hardly surprising considering that the artist who designed Luce and Friends is Simone Legno. His company, Tokidoki, markets “Pride” products and celebrates “Pride Month.”

“Showing people how to love one another, no matter what their differences may be!” the company website gushes. “Tokidoki spreads the light of love with the world!”

This is not the only time observers have linked Vatican promotion of 2025 Jubilee to LGBTQ activism. The event logo, pictured here,

For those who ask why are we pointing out to the “Luce” cartoon, this is the reason why: The Holy Catholic Church is not a cartoon, an “anime” thing, a g-y thing, a “meme”. Indeed, that puppet is profoundly symbolic of what the novus Ordites have made of the structures of our... pic.twitter.com/B3Qb57hoI2

Once the Church inspired the young with noble models like St. Dominic Savio and his motto “Death rather than sin.” Now we have... whatever the hell this “Luce” thing is.
