Biden's Labor Department Announces New Overtime Regulations for Salaried Employees

The U.S. Department of Labor announced new overtime regulations for “low paid” salaried workers. According to the new rule, salaried workers who make less than $844 per week will be eligible for overtime starting on July 1, 2024. Employees who earn less than $1,128 per week will be eligible starting on January 1, 2025.

The Department of Labor announced the new regulations on X, stating:

A hard day's work deserves a fair day's pay. Our new rule will benefit millions of workers, including many who have been working 40+ hours/week without any extra pay, by ensuring they gain overtime protections or a raise in salary or compensation level.

In response to the announcement, the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations (AFL-CIO) criticized former President Donald Trump, and praised the Biden administration, stating on X:

As president, Donald Trump gutted the rules that required overtime pay for millions of workers. We applaud the Biden administration for finalizing its @USDOL rule to restore and extend overtime protections for hard-working Americans.
