

House Votes to Surveil U.S. Citizens, but Will the Measure Get to the Senate?

On Friday the U.S. House of Representatives passed a measure allowing for warrantless surveillance of citizens.

The provision was part of their reauthorization of Section 702 of FISA, or the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act, which allows for ample latitude in monitoring foreign communications to track terroristic threats. However, such reconnaissance catches many U.S. citizens' interactions as well.

It's a measure long backed by the Biden administration, but the Republican-controlled House passed the reauthorization by a vote of 273-147. Representatives failed to pass an amendment that would have required authorities to seek a warrant.

gorodenkoff/iStock/Getty Images Plus

The bill will not go directly to the U.S. Senate for a vote, however. Fox News senior congressional correspondent Chad Pergram reported that Florida Republican Anna Paulina Luna made a motion that amounts to a "delaying tactic" — a rare procedural maneuver that requires legislators to "reconsider," or vote again, on Monday to send it to the Senate.

Subscribe to the New American

Get exclusive digital access to the most informative, non-partisan truthful news source for patriotic Americans!

Discover a refreshing blend of time-honored values, principles and insightful perspectives within the pages of "The New American" magazine. Delve into a world where tradition is the foundation, and exploration knows no bounds.

From politics and finance to foreign affairs, environment, culture, and technology, we bring you an unparalleled array of topics that matter most.

Subscribe

What's Included?

24 Issues Per Year
Optional Print Edition
Digital Edition Access
Exclusive Subscriber Content
Audio provided for all articles
Unlimited access to past issues
Coming Soon! Ad FREE
60-Day money back guarantee!
Cancel anytime.