Nike to Host Panel With Physician Who Performs Gender Surgeries on Children

Leaked emails obtained by the Daily Wire show that the woke athletic shoe company Nike will partner with a physician who has openly admitted to performing mastectomies on otherwise healthy female children. Dr. Blair Peters, a plastic and reconstructive surgeon, has openly admitted to performing mastectomies on “3 young adults and adolescents” in one day.

In a now-deleted Tweet, shared by Libs of TikTok and others, Peters wrote: “I performed three gender affirming mastectomies (top surgeries) for 3 young adults and adolescents today. All had supportive parents present. You could see the family relief the second we wheeled back to the OR. I could sense the shift. ‘We made it. We have a chance.’”

However, in a subsequent tweet (which has also been deleted), Peters seemed to argue that such surgeries were a conspiracy theory of some sort. “Many surgeries can actually be PREVENTED by early medical treatment. Surgery is frequently used as an inflammatory topic to manufacture a FALSE narrative that ‘kids’ are getting ‘parts chopped off.’ This is PROPAGANDA. Full stop./end.”

So, a surgeon who first admitted to “chopping parts off” of children then claimed that even the discussion of such a thing is propaganda. Is it any wonder that many of us can’t understand what is happening with the euphemistically termed “gender affirming” therapies?

Peters, who uses “he/they” pronouns and self-describes as “queersurgeon,” works at the Oregon Health and Science University and, according to the leaked email, will take part in a discussion panel with other LGBT activists on July 11 reportedly to focus on “policies impacting the transgender community.” The discussion is intended to be a part of the shoe company’s Pride celebration, which will go on through June and into July. The catchphrase for the company’s Pride celebration is “Together we are undeniable.”

“Join the Human Rights Campaign, Portland Community Football Club’s Kaig Lightner, and OHSU Trans Health Program’s Dr. Blair Peters for a panel and Q&A to discuss policies impacting the transgender community,” an email advertising the upcoming event said.

That panel discussion is just a small part of Nike’s Pride calendar.

“Join us at our inaugural Pride Community Fair, spotlighting local queer, women, and minority-owned businesses,” the leaked email proclaims. “You will have an opportunity to cultivate an undeniable sense of community and belonging with your Nike teammates through activations like ... a family friendly Drag Story Time.”

That “family friendly” drag event is scheduled for July 13.

Nike has also pledged big money gifts to several “LGBTQIA+” organizations. “This year, through our Inclusive Community portfolio investment, Nike is supporting six organizations advancing the LGBTQIA+ community with a total of $600,000 in funding,” the email states.

Perhaps the Portland-based Nike considers themselves immune from the type of backlash that other companies such as Bud Light and Target have faced in the past several months. After all, recall that Nike also partnered with former NFL quarterback Colin Kaepernick, an America-hating race-baiter who initiated kneeling for the national anthem. While many were frustrated with Nike’s decision to partner with Kaepernick, their bottom line didn’t take much of a hit.

Maybe this time, the leftist company’s blatant slap in the face to average American consumers will be met with a boycott that finally makes them think twice about pursuing the brand loyalty of such a small societal segment, especially when it comes to hardcore sports fanatics — the type of customers the company built their empire with but seems determined to leave in the past.
