

US Policy Rigged to Favor Foreign Multi-Nationals

In this interview with The New American's Alex Newman, U.S. Cattlemen's Association chief Dr. Brooke Miller explains that American trade and agricultural policies are rigged against domestic producers in favor of foreign multi-national corporate giants. For instance, the government allows foreign cattle producers to deceive American consumers by falsely labeling their beef as being American sourced. Miller discussed the fact that these risks to U.S. food security are a national security issue, something that has been brought to light by the coronavirus crisis. He also explains how globalist organizations and agreements such as the World Trade Organization (WTO) and the U.S.-Mexico-Canada Trade Agreement (USMCA) are harming U.S. sovereignty and economic productivity. This is not a free market, Dr. Miller warned. Finally, the PRIME Act introduced by Representative Thomas Massie, who recently spoke to TNA about it, was discussed.
