Professor/Imposter Defended Machete Murder of Boy in Police Youth Group

Supporters of President Trump aren't the only Americans who deserve to be shot down in the street, a professor at the University of Rhode Island recently said.

So do Hispanic boys who want to be cops, said a former professor at George Washington University in Washington, D.C.

That second professor is Jessica Krug, who recently confessed that she is not black, as she has pretended for years. She resigned her post last week after publishing a blog post in which she admitted that she's as nutty as a pecan tree and called herself a "leech" and a "coward."

"Snitches Get Stitches"

Krug was speaking during a panel at Columbia University when she said that young Lesandro 'Junior' Guzman-Feliz — a 15-year-old who was part of the New York City Police Department's Explorer program to introduce kids to a possible career in law enforcement — deserved to be hacked to death with a machete in 2018.

Five members of the Trinitarios, a Dominican street gang, went to prison for the murder. The gang hunted him down and killed him.

The Daily Mail found a video in which Krug justifies the brutal attack.

"So if you're in New York you probably heard a lot about this," she said. "And the narrative around it is that he was an innocent kid who was mistaken for a bad kid. He was the kid who was hacked apart with machetes in front of a bodega in the Bronx."

And that kid, Krug said, was a snitch, the Daily Mail reported, who worked in the Explorer's program:

Krug compared the frenzied attack to 'necklacing', the gruesome execution method used to punish black police informants in Apartheid-era South Africa, where a rubber tire filled with fuel would be placed round someone's neck or chest and set ablaze.

"When I think about this politics of silence that I'm talking about in the archives and about how silence can be a really radical presence historically, I think it's a radical presence today when people talk about snitches get stitches or when we think about a history of anti-apartheid struggle in South Africa and necklacing," she goes on.

"That kind of violence against people who are collaborating or working against their communities we have to consider a radical moment in 2018 in which people are using machetes to hack apart a 15-year-old boy who's working with the police.

apart become the narrative we tell, about how the loss of innocence is the story we mourn, and it's so much more difficult to understand what kind of freedom could we achieve by being willing to confront those within the community who are working against the interests of the community as a whole at the end of a machete."

Remarkably, GWU employed the woman until last week either because it didn't care about the remarks or didn't know about them.

Writing at Medium.com last week, Krug, who is Jewish, confessed that she is mentally ill and suffered "trauma" in her early years that caused her to pretend she was black.

"Every relationship I've formed," she wrote, "has been rooted in the napalm toxic soil of lies."

"I should absolutely be cancelled," she continued.... You should absolutely cancel me, and I absolutely cancel myself."

That's what she did when she quit the university in disgrace. Good thing, one less revolutionary leftist is at GWU polluting the minds of the students.

Loomis Remains

One professor who hasn't been canceled is Erik Loomis, who still teaches at URI despite his commentary that murdering Trump supporters is morally acceptable because they are fascists.

"He killed a fascist," Loomis wrote of Michael Reinhoehl, the Antifa-Black Lives Matter terrorist who murdered Trump supporter Aaron Danielson. Cops killed Reinhoehl in a gun battle when he opened fire as they tried to arrest him.

"I see nothing wrong with it, at least from a moral perspective. Tactically, that's a different story. But you could say the same thing about John Brown."

Loomis has also called members of the National Rifle Association "child murderers" and terrorist financiers.
