If you were to compile a list of what you would like to see achieved politically next year on the way to restoring America, what would you include? The New American's Steve Bonta and Paul Dragu offer their own suggestions for the list, from getting the U.S. out of the United Nations, to abolishing the federal income tax, to ending the Federal Reserve, to stopping the massive flow of illegal immigrants into America. But how realistically achievable are these goals? They discuss that too. And not surprisingly, the answer weighs heavily on what "We the People" do — or don't do — in the fight to save America.
