Martin Luther King is key figure in modern American history, but the truth about his life, his theology, and his politics has been largely hidden for nefarious reasons, argues scholar, entrepreneur and film maker Chad Jackson.

Jackson, who starred in the hit movies Uncle Tom and Uncle Tom II, has launched a docu-series called Unmasking the MLK Myth through his ministry Historia Revelata.

After undertaking a Herculean research project, he found that MLK was closely associated with communists, was a heretic who denied foundational doctrines of the Christian faith, and had deeply problematic elements in his personal life.

In this explosive interview with The New American magazine on Behind The Deep State with Alex Newman, Jackson explains the Soviet role in fomenting racial strife in America, too. He also chimes on what may have really happened with the assassination.
