It is essential for Covid tyrants and those involved in systematic corruption in government including trafficking of children to be held accountable for their crimes even after years have passed, explained Canadian engineer turned Covid whistleblower Dale Richardson in this interview on Conversations That Matter with The New American magazine's Alex Newman.

Richardson, founder of the Karis Project and author of multiple reports on these crimes, first uncovered some of the Covid lunacy from government when examining CDC guidelines for Covid HVAC infection control. "The guidelines they issued from the CDC were wrong," he said. "My first thought was, 'my kid could die, somebody else's kid could die.' So I thought, 'absolutely not'."

When he tried to pursue this in court, hoping to protect people's health and avoid catastrophic "shut down" policies, he was ARRESTED. And that began a horrific saga that included the abduction of his daughter by authorities and other abuses. Now, Richardson is determined to get justice and accountability.
