The controversies surrounding politicized climate “science” are actually symptoms of greater problems within science itself, warns leading Hungarian scientist László Szarka in this interview on Conversations That Matter with The New American magazine’s Alex Newman.

“There is no climate emergency or crisis,” Szarka explained in the interview.

Szarka, a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences who was able to get the academy to host a climate conference examining the issue, is hopeful that the tide can be turned. However, he warned that elites and the climate science establishment will likely cling to their hypothesis.
