The so-called “green energy” movement is actually a scam to redistribute wealth socialist-style, explains State Representative Jim Shaw (R-OK) to The New American’s Alex Newman.

Actually, many “green energy” companies are propped up through government subsidies and tax incentives and operate with zero operating costs, Shaw explained at G. Edward Griffin’s Red Pill Expo, where he spoke out about the scheme at length.

The solution to the problem is local action, he concluded, encouraging engaged citizens to consider running for local office instead of simply complaining about issues on social media.
