The official narrative surrounding child sex trafficker Jeffrey Epstein's alleged suicide in prison is implausible and deeply flawed, argued journalist Martin Gottesfeld who spent time in the very same prison that held Epstein.

Speaking to The New American magazine Senior Editor Alex Newman on Conversations That Matter, Gottesfeld said the story about the security camera malfunction was extremely unlikely. Whenever there is a failure, the prison gets locked down, he said.

"It's just too strange," he said. "And I was in that [Special Housing Unit] SHU."
