Restoring marriage amid the devastating attack coming against it is essential to saving the nation and civilization, explained North Carolina judge turned Southern Evangelical Seminary President Phil Ginn in this interview on Conversations That Matter with The New American magazine's Alex Newman.

Ginn, whose seminary is hosting a marriage conference in October to defend the institution, pointed out that the biblical understanding of marriage has largely been lost. The Bible says marriage is a representation of the relationship between Christ and the church, which offers clear insight into how it should run.

Judge Ginn believes the crumbling of marriage is a symptom of the broader collapse of culture. But it is not too late to turn it around. He believes that saving marriages could be part of a larger revival that might transform America once again.
