Arizona State University figures heavily in the Epstein files, and independent investigators Kristen Williamson has been investigating ASU since 2018. In this interview, The New American senior editor Rebecca Terrell talks with her about the crucial role that ASU president Michael Crow is playing in imposing technocracy on our country. Crow is chair of the Board of Trustees of In-Q-Tel, the venture capital fund of the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency, which uses tax dollars to invest in promoting the technocratic agenda, including gene therapies, surveillance measures and water supply control. With little political oversight, public action is needed regarding these issues.
