Austrian Kindergarten Expels Kids After Parents Complain About Pornographic Poster

An Austrian kindergarten expelled two children after their parents protested a classroom poster depicting nude adults — some of them transgender — and children.

The parents enrolled their children, ages one and four, in a kindergarten and day care for Austrian Broadcasting Corporation (ORF) employees' offspring. They never suspected that the facility, operated by Children in Vienna (KIWI), would sexualize their kids. However, they soon learned from their four-year-old that his classroom was decorated with "strange pictures."

And the pictures turned out to be more than just strange, reported Reduxx:

Investigating for himself, the father went down to the kindergarten and noted a poster had been installed featuring illustrations of nude individuals accompanied by the phrase: "Bodies naked and bare, vulva, penis, breasts, butts. You decide for yourself, indeed! Bodies are cool!"

One panel on the poster appears to depict an obese male in the shower with a young boy, while another features a trans-identified male with an exposed penis and breasts. The final panel of the poster shows two nude children taking a shower with an adult.

The poster, it turns out, was derived from the book Bodies Are Cool by American author and illustrator Tyler Feder. The book presents "opportunities to talk to kindergarten children about body perception," reads a seller's description of the German edition. (The American edition of the book does not include the poster images.)

According to Reduxx:

The cover of the book features a trans-identified female with mastectomy scars and a beard, while the naked trans-identified man with breasts is depicted with a heart-shaped tattoo of a trans flag. As previously reported by ReduXX, the pink-blue-white flag was designed by crossdressing fetishist Robert Hogge, who once penned a story about marrying a little girl who never ages.

Poster Parley

The Austrian parents were, for obvious reasons, upset about the poster. The Vienna-based exxpress reported that after the father spoke to the kindergarten teacher about the matter, resulting in the poster's removal, the parents were called before KIWI management. Wrote exxpress:

According to the mother, the manager advocated sexual education for children aged one to six at the meeting — an attitude that the parents criticized. “It seemed highly inappropriate to us,” the mother explained to the “Krone.” The situation escalated further: The family was threatened with termination of the daycare places for their two children ... which was finally implemented. “We were always concerned with finding a good solution in the interests of the children, but because we dared to criticize the practices of early sexualization, we were banned from all KIWI facilities, including after-school care,” say the parents.

The prohibition on enrolling their children in KIWI schools is no small matter. The company manages 93 other kindergartens and after-school programs in the Austrian capital.

KIWI management, naturally, defended its decision to expel the kids, saying it was interested in “promoting diversity, self-acceptance and a positive body image in children,” penned exxpress. “There were several personal discussions with the family, but unfortunately the basis of trust could no longer be established,” said a spokesperson.

No kidding.

Perverved Pedagogues

As much difficulty as they may have in finding another kindergarten for their kids, the parents should be grateful they learned about KIWI's perverted pedagogy so quickly. Other parents may not be so fortunate.

The company is clearly invested in the sexualization of children. A June edition of the KIWI Journal featured a cover story on “sexual education in kindergarten and daycare.” The article begins with the statement “Children are born as sexual beings,” and advocates for “everyday education” on sex.

Of course, as LifeSiteNews columnist Jonathon Van Maren pointed out, the sexualization of children is part and parcel of the sexual revolution, so it is no surprise that KIWI managers, products of the post-revolutionary era, have thoroughly embraced it:

There is an essential historical context to stories like this: The sexual revolutionaries were, in most cases, “groomers.” Wilhelm Reich, the intellectual who coined the term “sexual revolution,” advocated for the sexualization of childhood. The [Alfred] Kinsey team facilitated child abuse in order to make the case, in their infamous reports, that human beings are sexual from birth until death. Michel Foucault, it turns out, was a pedophile rapist. There are plenty of other examples, as well.

Thus, when we see the sexualization of children making a comeback, we should recognize that this is a feature, not a bug, of the sexual revolution — something advocated for by nearly every major intellectual that spearheaded the revolution to begin with.

Parents' Political Pal

At least one prominent Austrian politician has come to the parents' defense. Dominik Nepp, chairman of the Freedom Party of Austria (FPO), issued a statement condemning KIWI's actions.

"It is an unbelievable scandal that small children in Viennese kindergartens are confronted with disturbing transgender propaganda and that the ORF actively supports this," Nepp said.

He added:

The early sexualization of small children is not only irresponsible, but a massive attack on parental rights and the protection of our children. It is particularly scandalous that justified complaints from parents lead to their children being excluded from kindergarten. Such conditions are completely unacceptable and must lead to consequences.

The "consequences" Nepp has in mind are to strip KIWI of all public funding. He declared:

Under no circumstances should a kindergarten operator like this be allowed to continue to have a hand in our children. This absurd left-wing indoctrination has no place in Viennese kindergartens.
