European Leaders to Fight “Globalist Left” at Make Europe Great Again Conference

European anti-globalist forces are attempting to take advantage of the political momentum of President Donald Trump’s MAGA movement by gathering some of Europe’s brightest leaders for the second annual Make Europe Great Again (MEGA) international conference.

Set to take place in Brussels, Belgium, on January 28-29, 2025, the summit will welcome over 500 leaders from countries including the U.K., Spain, Italy, France, Romania, Argentina, Sweden, Poland, and more.

Two leading European conservative parties, the Alliance for Unified Romanians (AUR) and the European Conservatives and Reformists (ECR), will host the event at the European Parliament building in Brussels, where they expect over 500 anti-globalist movers and shakers to game-plan the “red-pilling” of the Old World.

“A Crucial Moment”

The summit comes at “a crucial moment for Europe and the entire world, following Donald Trump’s second presidential term,” George Simion, the president of the AUR, told The New American. “The rise of the sovereigntist movement is a clear sign of the desire of European and global peoples to preserve their identity, freedom, and the values that have shaped our societies.”

With the recent inauguration of President Donald Trump in the United States and mass migration devastating Europe, Simion said, the summit meets at “a turning point where, on one side, we have the globalist Left, which threatens to distort society and corrupt the minds and souls of people, while on the other side, we, the conservatives and sovereigntists, represent the only true protection against this unprecedented madness.”

“During the conference, we will reaffirm our commitment to freedom, prosperity, and peace. We want a strong Europe, based on sovereign nations that understand that strength comes from respecting traditions, moral values, and cultural identity. We must fight to protect the foundation of our societies and to pass on the cultural heritage that defines us,” he continued.

Americans Joining In MEGA

The event will host a few American leaders, including Kari Lake, Trump’s pick to lead the federally funded Voice of America broadcasting network; biochemist and author Dr. Robert Malone; and Kimberly Fletcher, the founder and president of Moms for America.
